6. USFA Releases Publication Update for *Safety Considerations for the Design of Fire and Emergency Medical Stations

The United States Fire Administration announced the release of the updated edition of their Safety and Health Considerations for the Design of Fire and Emergency Medical Services Stations. The report was produced under a cooperative research agreement with IFSTA, who is headquartered at Fire Protection Publications at Oklahoma State University. The principal investigator/writer of the report was Robert Tutterow, of the F.I.E.R.O organization in Charlotte, North Carolina. He is also the retired Safety Officer from the Charlotte Fire Department. He is one of the foremost experts on this topic.

This report provides a large amount of information on all aspects of health and safety issues that should be considered when designing or retrofitting fire and EMS stations. It is based on the latest research in reducing the risk of occupational illnesses and injuries, including cancer.

The report can be viewed/downloaded from:
https://www.usfa.fema.gov/downloads/pdf/publications/design_of_fire_ems_stations.pdf
