

Tim Egan is a senior finance executive who, prior to his June 2021 retirement from KPMG, served as the lead audit partner for some of the firm's largest consumer market, technology, media and telecommunication clients, with over 35 years of experience. He has provided support to private and public companies at various stages of development from early start-up to large multinational companies, including advising on SEC filings as well IPOs, due diligence, debt/equity transactions and complex accounting matters. Other skills and experiences have included his technical role as one of the firm's IFRS Reviewing Partners, serving as a member of the KPMG Partnership Audit Committee for several years, being actively involved in campus recruiting and training, and being a mentor to many KPMG professionals.

In addition to his role on the Connecticut State Board of Accountancy, Tim is an active member of the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA), currently serving on NASBA's Audit Committee and previously serving on the Standard-Setting and Professional Trends Advisory Committee.

Tim received his Bachelor of Science degree in Accounting from The Pennsylvania State University, and is a certified public accountant in the States of Connecticut and New York.
