CT Health Enhancement Community: Community Member Engagement Summary
(As of 10/26/18)

Background
As part of the new Health Enhancement Community Initiative, Connecticut worked with four “Reference Communities” that gave input and feedback on what HECs might look like and do. Part of the Reference Communities’ work was getting direct community member feedback. Reference Communities have been part of the HEC design process since May 2018. Each Reference Community did a final report that includes the input they got from the community.

The Health Enhancement Community Initiative consultant also met with Clifford Beers Clinic’s Parents Group to get feedback.

Examples of How Community Member Feedback Influenced the Health Enhancement Community Model Draft Design

<th>How it Influenced the HEC Design:</th>

<tr>
<td>A community member said that the model should adopt the community involvement philosophy of “nothing for us without us.”</td>
<td>The draft model includes locally owned and directed community organizing groups selecting and leading interventions about the things that matter most to them in their communities.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Community advocates also gave feedback about how this could happen.</td>
<td>• It would take a lot to make it happen across the state, but community members would have the power to drive what happens in their communities.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Many community members model should include multiple ways to meaningfully engage community members, including:</td>
<td>The draft model also includes a governance group that will include community members, including in decision making.</td>

<tr>
<td>• Funds specifically for community engagement</td>
<td>These were included in the draft model.</td>

<tr>
<td>• Requirement of having community members at every table</td>
<td>We did hear some disagreement among stakeholders about payment and food.</td>
</tr>

</table>
- Multiple roles to collect outreach information and bring that back/represent to group
- Support for capacity building for community leaders and members
- Meetings and other types of engagement after hours and in easy-to-get-to community locations
- Providing child care, transportation, food, etc.

Many community members said they were interested and enthusiastic about the priority areas: 1) Child well-being and 2) Healthy weight/physical fitness

This was a validation of the priorities in the draft model.

Many community members were eager to talk about what they think the root causes of poor health are in their communities and what should be done about them. Examples of root causes they talked about:

- Lack of or not enough family/social supports
- People existing on “survival income” not “living income”
- Parks, sidewalks, and streets that make it difficult to get healthy
- Housing instability and lack of access to affordable housing
- Lack of access to transportation

Example of an intervention a parent’s group discussed:

A group of parents talked how easy it was to get unhealthy food and how hard it was to get healthy food, especially if corner stores are the easiest place to shop. They talked about how they would redesign the store, including putting health, fresh food upfront and making healthy food cost less. They also said they would like to have a mobile grocery store that comes to their community and has good prices.

The draft model has community organizing groups identifying root causes of poor health, what matters to them, and what they want to do about them and then leading interventions.

A community member gave an example of a child who recently drowned to illustrate that you can’t just do one thing and think you are going to solve the problem (like try to hire more lifeguards). You have to implement several related things to solve the problem and use it as a way to make other things better, including addressing programs and policies in schools for more kids learn how to swim, create more employment opportunities for kids through becoming lifeguards, and challenging the cultural norm that says Black kids don’t swim.

This was a validation of the draft intervention framework, which included policy, systems, programs, and cultural norm interventions.

<tr>
<td>Some community members said they should be involved in designing interventions.</td>

<tr>
<td>That curriculum was used in the draft model as an example of community member-lead interventions and a cultural norm change for organizations. The information in the document was used to add to the community involvement aspect of the draft model.</td>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Parents in the Parents Group said that they are frustrated by how difficult it can be to access existing programs, especially as a family.</th>

<tr>
<td>This influenced how the draft model described the connecting existing interventions to create a more seamless experience for community members.</td>

<tr>
<th>Some community members said that community members may not be accessing existing funding or resources because they aren’t aware of them or services weren’t coordinated coordination of services or easy to use.</th>

<tr>
<td>The draft model recommends using, linking, or improving what is already in place and not just adding new interventions.</td>
