Cars and trucks get benefit greatly from clean air filters. Many drivers are aware of the need to change the oil in their vehicles according to the manufacturer's schedule, but they may be unaware of the many benefits of changing air filters. One benefit is that it helps improve the engine's performance. Dirty air filters can restrict the flow of air to the engine, which can cause the engine to run poorly. This can lead to increased fuel consumption and higher emissions. Changing air filters regularly can help prevent these problems and keep your vehicle running smoothly.

Did you know?

The National Air Filtration Association (NAFA) estimates that the average driver spends $12,000 to $15,000 on fuel over the life of a car. That's why it's a good idea to change your air filter regularly. It's a simple task that can save you a lot of money in the long run.

Run air conditioners WITHOUT WASTING ENERGY

Few people can make it through the dog days of summer without turning on their air conditioners. Men and women concerned about the environment and conserving energy may try to avoid using their air conditioners, but doing so on especially hot days can be challenging and potentially even deadly. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that roughly 600 people die from complications related to extreme heat each year. Heat stroke can result when a body overheats after prolonged exposure to or physical exertion in high temperatures. The Mayo Clinic notes that the condition is most common in summer and that a lack of air conditioning during periods of sustained hot weather is a risk for heat stroke.

Conserving energy during summer is a noble pursuit, but people should not jeopardize their health in an effort to conserve energy. Air conditioners might not be the most eco-friendly appliances, but there are ways to run them without wasting energy.

- Use a window unit or zoned system overnight. The U.S. Department of Energy notes that central air conditioners are more efficient than room air conditioners, which are typically installed in windows. But central air conditioning systems that are not zoned may be cooling empty rooms overnight. Apartment dwellers may find window units less wasteful, while homeowners who can afford to install zoned air conditioning systems may rest easier knowing they are only paying to cool certain parts of their homes overnight. Zoned systems come equipped with programmable thermostats that homeowners can adjust when they go to bed, ensuring they won't be cooling empty living rooms and basements overnight.
- Have units serviced before summer begins. Well-maintained central air conditioners will work more efficiently. Routine maintenance of air conditioning systems will ensure that systems aren't working harder, and therefore consuming more energy, than necessary to cool a home.
 - Let fans and air conditioners work together. The DOE notes that using fans and air conditioners simultaneously is an effective way to circulate cool air throughout a home. By running both fans and air conditioners at the same time, air conditioners won't have to be run as long or as hard as they would if no fans were turned on.
 - Conserve energy in other ways. Because the dangers of heat stroke and heat exhaustion are so considerable, men and women should never keep their air conditioners off on hot days simply to conserve energy. Finding safer alternatives to conserving energy on hot days can be just as effective and won't put consumers' health at risk. Unplug appliances that are not being used and prepare cold dinners so ovens don't need to be turned on. In addition, take advantage of the longer daylight hours in summer and keep lights off until the sun goes down. These are safe ways to conserve energy on hot days.

Air conditioners can keep people safe during summer, and there are ways to use them and still conserve energy.

Having central air conditioning units serviced before the start of summer can ensure they run as efficiently as possible when temperatures begin to rise.

The American Red Cross, one of the most distinguished humanitarian organizations in the world, traces its history back to the 18th century. In 1861, former American Civil War nurse Clara Barton and her circle of acquaintances founded the American Red Cross in Washington D.C. This new role required by a postwar world that had been ravaged by the American Civil War. Though many women did not work outside the home during Barton's era, the Massachusetts-born nurse would serve as the head of the American Red Cross for 23 years, during which time she aided the United States military in the Spanish-American War. Barton also successfully campaigned for including peacetime relief work as part of the global Red Cross mission. Today the American Red Cross continues to help millions of people in need. Among the organization's many missions are helping Americans affected by natural disasters, supporting military personnel and their families, collecting blood for processing and distribution, providing health and safety education and training, and providing international relief assistance.
