NOTICE

NOTICE IS HERBY GIVEN, pursuant to Section 16-50g et seq. of the Connecticut General Statutes, as amended, and Section 16-50j-1 et seq. of the Regulations of Connecticut State Agencies, as amended, of the intent of Homeland Towers, LLC ("Homeland Towers") and New Cingular Wireless PCS, LLC ("AT&T") (together the "Applicants") to file an Application for a Certificate of Environmental Compatibility and Public Need with the Connecticut Siting Council ("Siting Council") on or after August 10, 2022 to construct a wireless telecommunications tower facility ("Facility") at 60 Vale Road in the Town of Brookfield.

The Facility is proposed on an approximately 3.99-acre parcel of land owned by 70 Vale Road LLC identified as Parcel ID E16023 on the Town of Brookfield Tax Map.

The Facility consists of a new self-supporting monopole that is 165' tall located within a 3,150 square-foot fenced equipment compound in the northern section of the approximately 3.99-acre parcel. AT&T's antennas would be installed at a centerline height of approximately 161' above grade level and the Facility will be designed to support the antennas and equipment of other FCC licensed wireless carriers as well as local emergency communications equipment.

The Application explains the need, purpose and benefits of the Facility and also describes the environmental impacts of the proposed Facility.

Interested parties and residents of Brookfield, Connecticut are invited to review the Application during normal business hours after August 10, 2022 when the Application is anticipated to be filed, at the following offices:

Scully, Dodgers broadcaster for 67 years, dies at age 94

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Hall of Fame broadcaster Vin Scully, whose call provided the soundtrack of summer while entertaining and informing Dodgers fans in Brooklyn and Los Angeles for 67 years, died Tuesday night. He was 94.

Scully died at his home in the Hidden Hills neighborhood of Los Angeles, the team announced after being informed by family members. No cause of death was provided.

"He was the best there ever was," pitcher Clayton Kershaw said after the Dodgers game in San Francisco. "Just such a special man. I'm grateful and thankful I got to know him as well as I did."

As the longest tenured broadcaster with a single team in pro sports history, Scully saw it all and called it all. He began in the 1950s era of Pee Wee Reese and Jackie Robinson, on to the 1990s with Don Drysdale and Sandy Kousser, into the 1990s with Steve Garvey and Don Sutton, and through the 1990s with Orel Hershiser and Fernando Valenzuela. In the 1990s, it was Mike Piazza and Hiroto Nomo, followed by Eric Stanley, Manny Ramirez and Yasiel Puig in the 21st century.

"You gave me my Wild Horse name. You gave me love. You taught me like a father," tweeted Puig, the talented Cuban-born outfielder who learned brightly upon his Dodgers debut in 2012. "I will never forget you, my heart is broken."

The Dodgers changed players, managers, executives, owners — and even colors — but Scully and his soothing, forthright style remained a constant for the fans.

He opened broadcasts with the familiar greeting, "Hi, everybody, and a very pleasant good evening to you wherever you may be."

Ever gracious both in person and on the air, Scully considered himself merely a conduit between the game and the fans.

"His voice played a monumental role in some of the greatest moments in the history of our sport," Major League Baseball Commissioner Rob Manfred said. "I am proud that Vin was synonymous with baseball because he embodied the very best of our national pastime."

After the Dodgers' 9-2 win, the Giants posted a Scully tribute on the videoblog. "There's not a better storyteller and I think everyone considers him family," Dodgers manager Dave Roberts said. "He was in our living room for many generations. He lived a beautiful life, a legacy that will live on forever."

Although he was paid by the Dodgers, Scully was unafraid to criticize a ball player or a manager's decision, or praise an opponent while spinning stories against a lackluster drop of routine plays and noteworthy achievements. He always said he wanted to see things with his eyes, not his heart.

"We have just an icon," team president and CEO Stan Kasten said. "His voice will always be heard and etched in all our minds for ever."

Vincent Edward Scully was born Nov. 20, 1927, in the Bronx. He was the son of a silk salesman who died of pneumonia when Scully was 7. His mother owned the family to Brooklyn, where the red-tailed, blue-eyed Scully grew up playing stickball in the streets.

As a child, Scully would grab a pillow, put it under the family's four-legged radio and lay his head directly under the speaker to hear whoever was talking on the air. With a stack of saltine crackers and a glass of milk nearby, the boy was transfixed by the crowd's roar that rained goodness. He thought he'd like to call the radio himself.

Scully, who played outfield for two years on the Yeshiva University baseball team, began his career by working baseball, football and basketball games for the university's radio station.

At age 22, he was hired by a CBS radio affiliate in Washington, D.C.

He soon joined Hall of Famer Red Barber and Comte Deamund in the Brooklyn Dodgers' radio and television broadcasts. In 1955, at age 28, Scully became the youngest person to broadcast a World Series game, a mark that still stands.

He moved west with the Dodgers in 1958. Scully called three perfect games — Don Larsen in the 1956 World Series, Sandy Kousser in 1966 and Dennis Martinez in 1991 — and 16 no-hitters.

He also was on the air when Don Drysdale set his scoreless innings streak of 25 2/3 innings in 1968 and again when Hershiser broke the record with 33 consecutive scoreless innings 20 years later.

When Hank Aaron hit his 718th home run to break Babe Ruth's record in 1974, it was against the Dodgers and, of course, Scully was on the air.

"A Black man is getting a standing ovation in the Deep South for breaking a record of all-time baseball," Scully told listeners. "What a marvelous moment for baseball."

Thomas posts another triple-double as Sun beat Mercury

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNCAVILLE — Alyssa Thomas posted her second triple-double in less than two weeks and the Connecticut Sun beat the Phoenix Mercury 87-63 on Tuesday night.

Thomas, who recorded the franchise's first triple-double in a win over the Minnesota Lynx on July 20, finished with 20 points, 12 rebounds and 10 assists. The No. 4 pick overall in the 2015 draft, the 6-foot-2 Thomas is just the fifth WNBA player with multiple triple-doubles and joined Candace Parker (Chicago Sky) and Sabrina Ionescu (New York Liberty) as the only players with three that meet this season.

Natalia Hillman had 16 points to lead seven Connecticut players scoring in double figures. It's the 21st time in league history that many players have reached double-digits in the same game. Connecticut has done it three times.

Phoenix took a 13-9 lead when Sheryl Swoopes with a 3-point shot in the first quarter but the Mercury went scoreless for the next 7-plus minutes. Bristow James made a layup to open the scoring in the second quarter and gave Connecticut (6-10) the lead for good at 14-11. Hillman made a 3-pointer to make it 17-10 with 7:30 left in the third and the Sun led by double figures the rest of the way.

The Mercury (13-10) have last back-to-back games to fall in game behind the Dallas Wings (6-16) in the sixth spot in the WNBA standings with less than two weeks remaining in the regular season. New York, the Los Phoenix Mercury guard Sophie Cunningham (9) fouls Connecticut Sun forward Alyssa Thomas during Tuesday's game in Uncasville.

Angelo Sparks, the Atlanta Dream and the Minnesota Lynx (11) are all within a game of Phoenix.

Dijana Carrington and DeWanna Bonner scored 20 points apiece, Jones scored 14 and Janelle Jones added 10 points and 10 rebounds for the Sun.

Skyler Hagino-Smith and Sophie Cunningham scored 13 points apiece for Phoenix and Kaela Davis added 10.

Jackson is savoring each day of her comeback

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Lauren Jackson is savoring every minute of her basketball comeback even though the battle-tested Australian hoops icon knows she can't do things that once captivated fans before retiring from the sport six years ago.

No, that "LJ" is no one. The Chicago native, who is now 43-year-old mom, and her return is creating a buzz.

"I don't know when the last day will be. It has been a slow process," Jackson said in an interview with The Associated Press while training in New York with the Australian national team last week. "I can't believe I'm back here. It's so bizarre. It's been fun, a real journey."

Jackson's body felt her down and forced her to walk away from the game six years ago, and she doesn't know how long it will hold up.

Nearly 10 months after starting her return, Jackson is on the short-list to play for the Australian national team at the FIBA World Cup in Sydney next month. She helped Australia win the gold medal in the 2000 World Cup in Brazil.

"I get so emotional talking about this. I never thought I'd represent Australia again," the four-time WNBA MVP said. "In my way to the first game against Canada on the bus I started crying because I was wearing the green and gold again. My life has changed so much and I'm not the person I used to be as an athlete."

Even if the 6-foot-6 Jackson isn't the same player who averaged 16.6 points in her WNBA career for Seattle, she still can compete with the best.

Jackson said she is stronger than when she played for the Storm and helped them win two championships. She also won league titles in Australia, Spain and Russia as well as three Olympic silver medals and one bronze.

"I played two Olympics with her. She's still pretty good," Australian national team coach Sandy Brondello said. "She's getting her legs back and looks in great shape. She makes good reads. She's not still 17 or 18 six years ago, but she certainly still shows a lot of LJ-like moves."

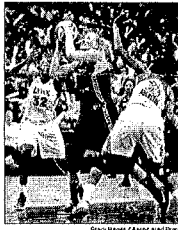

Jackson retired from playing in 2016 after knee injuries derailed her career. She had hoped to compete in the Olympics that year but an ACL injury ended that dream. She stepped playing in the WNBA in 2022, working away as one of the best players in league history.

Jackson had no intention of playing again competitively after having a partial reoperation on her right knee and dealing with the ACL tear that was followed by a staph infection. She also acknowledged she had become reliant on painkillers, anti-inflammatories, sleeping pills and antidepressants at the end of her playing career.

"I would take anything to get me out of bed in the morning," Jackson told the AP. A few years later, she tried medical cannabis.

Jackson said she was part of a trial for medical cannabis 18 months ago and that it seemed to help. A few months later she started working out again to try and get to basketball shape — she had gained nearly 50 pounds since retiring.

She was working out with the coach of her hometown Australian Basketball league team, Matt Pops, the coach of the Allyson team, said to her that led her to leave her comeback and play.

"People started talking about playing for Australia," he said. "I never thought I'd start get panic attacks."

"You can't look too far ahead ... it was too big a goal. The way my career ended I couldn't deal with that emotionally."

Australian player Rebekkah Allen never had a chance to play with Jackson on the national team. The Liberty's wing wasn't part of the New York training camp because of schedule conflicts with her WNBA team. But what Jackson is attempting to do isn't lost on the 29-year-old.

"She's an icon of basketball in the world and one of the best to come out of Australia," Allen said. "Even to learn from her and for her personally to beat the odds with the injuries she's had and to come back and play at such a high caliber. You can learn so much from her experience."

"I was watching her in the Olympics. I loved her game, her passion. She played with such intensity," Allen added. "Having that type of personality is an asset. I'm excited to play along side of her."

Now after playing about a dozen games in the Australian league, Jackson said she has passed some of the "little hurdles," barriers and obstacles "she wanted to hit. She'll wait and see if she is selected to the team that will compete at the World Cup. Brondello expects the team to be announced soon.

She knows her two sons, Harry and Lenny, will be cheering her on if she does make the squad which she led to medals in four Olympics and three World Cup.

"It's definitely still me that this could happen," Jackson said. "My teammates have been incredible. They are so supportive. Encouraged me more than I could have asked for. Whatever role I play it will be a supporting role."

"Such an incredibly special time for me that I never thought I'd be a part of again. I still get teary about it."

Senators Tuberville, Manchin working on bill to tackle NIL

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. Tommy Tuberville and Sen. Joe Manchin have spearheaded legislation to overhaul college sports rules, including the Southeastern Conference councils, for feedback and then soon hope to regulate the way athletes are compensated for their names, images and likenesses.

Tuberville (R-Ala.), a former college football coach who led Auburn to an undefeated season in 2003, and Manchin (D-W.Va.), a former coach of West Virginia's basketball team, have repeatedly called for help from Congress in regulating the murky and often conflicting compensation structure even before the NCAA last summer lifted its restrictions on athletes cashing in on their fame.

The NCAA removed its ban on NIL compensation for athletes without setting detailed, uniform rules. A patchwork of state laws has created a complex landscape for college athletes' departments and allowed boosters to become involved in ways that challenge the NCAA's ability to enforce the broad rules that are in place.

At least eight bills related to college sports have been filed by federal lawmakers over the past four years — some more than once — addressing NIL and other larger issues. There has been no substantive movement on any of them.

One of them, the College Athlete Bill of Rights put forth by Democratic Sen. Booker and Republican Sen. Blaine Luetkemeyer, is set to be reintroduced by the senators. It also requested that
