Dear Mr. Stein:

The Meriden Conservation Commission firmly believes removing the existing NRG Power Plant buildings is the best way to resolve the eyesore that those buildings are to the community. There has been detrimental impact to the wildlife, as well as some of the plant life there due to the construction. If the existing buildings are not going to be removed, then an effort must be made to paint the buildings a neutral color that will blend into the background. There should also be some planting of trees such as evergreens. These stipulations were part of the original agreement they made with the city. Obviously that never happened.

The issue of the paved roads should also be addressed, however, if they are not eventually that will revert back to nature.

Respectfully,
