Greater Bridgeport Regional Council	Regional planning agency	meeting	Provided technical support and guidance on the Phase 1 proposal and elements of a successful proposal for Phase 2
Municipalities and Councils of Government in New Haven and Fairfield Counties	Municipalities and Councils of Government in New Haven and Fairfield Counties	webinar	Provided Phase 1 vulnerability assessment to impacts of climate change and criteria for pilot geography for HUD Phase 2 application for Letter of Interest submission.
Bridgeport, Fairfield, GBRC, Meriden, Milford, New Haven, Norwalk, SCRCOG, Stamford, West Haven, WestCOG, Woodbridge	Municipalities and Councils of Government in New Haven and Fairfield Counties	Receipt of Letters of Interest from municipal and council of government in MID-URN	Municipalities and Councils of Government in the MID-URN counties submitted letters of interest in participating in the Phase 2 application. The letters of interest included capacity, need, approach/vision for resiliency, and long-term commitment for each municipality or Council of Government. Each letter was at least 5 pages single spaced and included municipality details or regional vulnerabilities and needs or prioritized future projects to address those needs. The most common vulnerability sited was flooding due to storm surge and precipitation, as was shown in our Phase 1 assessment. Flooding of critical infrastructure, including roads, wastewater treatment plants, substations, and emergency response facilities were listed as major concerns. Housing located in low-lying areas was also a concern for both owner-occupied and public housing for low income and elderly populations. The resiliency efforts in municipalities were focused on shoreline

			protection measures for stopping coastal erosion or keeping flood waters out of certain areas. Most of the efforts proposed hard structures or grey infrastructure solutions. Some letters included dunes or living shorelines options in certain areas. Raising roads was also a common ask. Most municipalities noted the importance of the rail line for their economic stability, but often proposals for solutions did not focus on how to capitalize on that rail system. Again, protection at the shoreline with grey infrastructures were predominantly the ideas put forward. The larger cities of Stamford, Norwalk, Bridgeport, and New Haven who submitted letters did include TOD as a natural part of their overall resilience of their communities, but still wanted a strong connection to addressing flooding at their shoreline or due to precipitation events, i.e. stormwater. The SAFR group reviewed all of the letters of interest and used the letters to start to evaluate a pilot geography. All of the municipalities and councils of government who submitted a letter of interest were invited to a Connecticut Resilience Academy to further develop their ideas.
SAFR	Academic institutions, state government agencies, regional planning agencies, planning decision makers and resources	Walking tour of Connecticut's coastal geology and impacts of sea level rise and storms on the coast	A Professor and former state geologist led a tour of coastal sites in Connecticut that exemplify the high ridgelines with former deltas that are being drowned in a rising sea. He showed how marshes and beaches change during storms and where erosion happens on the coast. This educated the state agency representatives on the underlying science and geology that needs to inform decision-making about land use on the coast.
