Public Utilities Regulatory Authority

PURA Outlook

October 4, 2022

As the temperatures begin to drop and the leaves change colors, the Public Utilities Regulatory Authority (Authority or PURA) also finds itself in the middle of a different kind of season; "Rate Case Season." Both the Aquarion Water Company and The United Illuminating Company, combined serving approximately 550,000 customers in Connecticut, have filed applications to amend their rates, launching respective 200- and 350-day deadlines by which PURA must complete its review of each application.

Rate cases are a crucial function of regulating public utilities, as they provide transparency into utility plans and associated costs. Rate cases also provide an opportunity for PURA to take a deep dive into each company's expenses such as capital programs, personnel and management costs, and taxes, as well as rate designs, customer service, and overall performance. This process allows PURA to determine whether any requested rate increase is necessary and reasonable and that the associated costs are "prudent." The Authority's newly formed Office of Technical and Regulatory Analysis (TRA), comprised of diverse areas of expertise including accounting, finance, economics, policy, and engineering, is prepared to take a comprehensive approach to each rate case review.

It is important to note that the Authority's review is not based only on the evidence supplied by the utilities, but also on information supplied by stakeholders. Yet, as a quasi-judicial agency, PURA can only make decisions based on the record evidence placed before us in any given proceeding. Without the active engagement of other state agencies, municipalities, advocates, and individual ratepayers, our decisions are not as robust as they otherwise would be; especially given the consequential matters we are tasked with overseeing. We strongly encourage ratepayers to participate in our public comment hearings or to submit written comments so that your perspectives and evidence can be considered in the formal record by the PURA Commissioners. Please take time to review our requests for public comments on both the Aquarion and United Illuminating applications for important deadlines to be aware of regarding these opportunities.

The Authority has scheduled multiple events throughout the next three months for ratepayers to get involved and has also been working to develop educational resources for ratepayers in advance of these meetings. We look forward to engaging with stakeholders through these proceedings. As always, PURA is committed to exercising its authority to improve the public outcomes of utility service and to deliver on the promise of an equitable modern grid in Connecticut.
