Text Description
This text is a poem written in couplet form. It takes the reader through a series of nightmarish situations involving every imaginable horror from a Martian kidnapping to a cataclysmic disaster where the earth melts in the sun. The surprise ending reveals that these “horrors” are the comical thoughts of a student the night before the first day of school.

Lexile and Grade Level	Intermediate grades	Text Length	88 words
Qualitative
Meaning/Central Ideas		Text Structure/Organization
The mixed feelings (anxiety and excitement) all bring to the first day of school can result in exaggerated fears. The surprise ending provides the connection to these first day mixed feelings.		There are no text features or illustrations provided. Each line of the poem is a single event but all share the idea that horrible things are happening to the reader with no hope for rescue. The last word in every two lines rhymes.
Prior Knowledge Demands		Language Features
Familiar scenarios common to horror stories are presented. There are no prior knowledge demands.		This poem contains vivid verbs and adjectives, descriptive imagery, and an easily identifiable rhyme scheme. There is limited use of simile and alliteration.
Potential Reader/Task Challenges
The title could be misleading prior to reading the poem. Otherwise, the students should find each scenario engaging and suspenseful.
Big Takeaway
Throughout Look Out! , Max Fatchen uses vivid imagery and humor to exaggerate the fears most students bring to the first day of school.
