II. Oversight and Administration of Education in Juvenile Justice Facilities

Dr. Glen Worthy began with introductions to his new assistant superintendents, Tina Mitchell and John Target. The team provided background on the formation of the Juvenile Justice Education Unit Team. Public Act 21-127 tasked DCF with assessing the education programs for youth involved with the Juvenile Justice System and required the establishment of a new unity within DCF, that will analyze the educational records, perform needs assessments, and track the educational progress of individuals in the juvenile justice population.

Dr. Worthy and his team provided an overview of the programs and services, progress to date, challenges the system is facing, and an overview of their progress and plans for success in the future.

Dr. Hegedus shared that the Center for Excellence in Teaching and Learning is re-establishing the summer academy work that has happened at Hillhouse and working with the new office of College and Career Readiness at New Haven Public Schools. They are planning to continue this work in the New Haven region as well.

Commissioner Russell-Tucker shared the agency’s commitment to partnership on behalf of all of our students. She also shared an update on what’s happening in social emotional learning to support the healthy development of students.

John Frassinelli shared that SDE has identified individuals to serve as juvenile justice liaisons in 20 districts. Also, SDE is ensuring that any credits earned at a juvenile justice facility are accepted when students return to their district. Mr. Frassinelli acknowledge the work and collaboration with Patricia Nunez from JUD to support all of the facilities including improvements in technology.

III. Fatherhood Initiative

Deputy Commissioner shared how DCF has changed its model to create a well-being system for all children, in particularly for those children who enter DCF care. We're changing the narrative: when children enter our care, DCF is committed to make sure that they are better off than they were before they came in. Quality of life and children's well-being is divided in several domains from health and wellness to mental health to social connections and clearly education and academic achievement. It's one of those domains that we have for children, who we not only have in foster care, but also children that we interact with that are still with their families. All of our work has really taken off to be a family strengthening organization and a child well-being organization and finding ways to enhance the well-being and the strengthening of families has been some of the techniques we've been using.

The active engagement of dads in the process ensures that we know who the dad is, not just the mom. We ensure that the dad has an opportunity to be heard and participate in the service planning and to ensure, most importantly, the safety of the child going forward. They have found that increased and engagement of dad has shown a reduction in repeat maltreatment.

Deputy Commissioner also talked about the benefits and positive outcomes when children are placed with a relative, they know.
