Know Your Rights

The law protects individuals with disabilities from discrimination in facilities, employment, education, and in your communities. This does not change during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Even in a crisis, you have the right to live, work, learn, and access your community without discrimination or increased safety risks due to COVID-19.

What rights may be at risk during COVID-19?

- The right to the same medical care as anyone else even if you have other conditions,
- The right to receive school-based supports and services,
- The right to adequate direct care staff for activities of daily living,
- The right to receive services in a healthy setting

How can DRCT help?

DRCT staff are working remotely. You can still contact us if you have questions about your legal rights during this crisis, if you believe you are experiencing disability-related discrimination impacted by COVID-19 or are having trouble accessing information related to COVID-19.
